Senator Pepper believes there should be two commissions, one to investigate the bitminous and one the hard coal industry. He has suggested to Senator Borah that two separate bills be passed, use for a soft coal and the other far a hard coal commission, or that the Borah bill be amended to provide for two commissions. Senator Borah is opposed to this plan, and holds that the same commission could make one report on both branches.

Market Commissioner's Office Puts Peddlers at the ducers' organization, announced yester-Mercy of Field Agents day.

By M. Jay Racusin

"If Mr. Friedman will send me a good report about you we will see about a permit."

The Mr. Friedman referred to is Louis Friedman, supervisor of the Orchard Street pusheart market. The "me" is an official in the office of Commissioner of Markets Edwin J. O. Malley. The "you" is a poor old pedder who for weeks had been we raing out the stones between O'falley's and Friedman's effects in an effort to cook in a little breathing space along the O'clard Street pusheart market to cook in a little breathing space along the O'clard Street pusheart market and carlied with the face that has caused for the cook in a little breathing space along the O'clard Street carl to cell his penny of the space and the could stand he was add that he could ten he taken up.

stands without cause and their places given to others. The only inference, they assert, that can be drawn from this arbitrary action is that money is collected for the change.

And finally I learn that peddlers are still compelled to pay storekeepers for the privilege of maintaining their stands in front of their places, although Commissioner O'Malley had told me this practice had been eliminated by his $1 a week permit system.

On the contrary, I am informed that the exactions are practised with the full knowledge of supervisors and that they even insist upon it.

Maybe this has some relation to the and wish.

Anyhow, I was informed of one case where the peddler did not meet the demand of the supervisor and he hasn't got his stand yet. In the course of an afiidavit a vender whose name is withheld for obvious reasons relates how he had had a cart in one spot in Orchard Street for nearly twenty vents, and how Street for nearly twenty years, and how Friedman, for no cause that the peddler could imagine, refused to grant him a permit for it some months ago.

Differs With O'Malley After repeated pleadings for a spot, the peddler says Supervisor Friedman brought up the question of a stand in front of the premises at 160 Orchard Street, where there was an empty space at the time.

"Supervisor Friedman informed me," runs the affidavit, "that if I would pay the stockeeper located at these premises $1f a month he would give me permission to stand at this place. I told him I was unable to enter into any such arrangement."

Commissioner O'Malley says that this sort of thing has been eliminated. There is many a poor victim over on Orchard Street who can give a more correct answer.

A little phrase on the $1 a week per-

A little phrase on the $1 a week permits issued to the hawkers is interesting. It reads that the permit "imits issued to the hawkers is interesting. It reads that the permit "is revocable at the pleasure of the Commissioner." Orchard Street peddlers say they don't believe Commissioner O'Malley ever indulged in the pleasure, but that Friedman certainly did and frequently. He has been seen to demand permits from peddlers on some pretext or another and tear them up on the streets. They take this to indicate that the supervisor is the real authority and decides if an applicant shall have a permit.

And there is no telling, say the peddlers, how far they are going to carry their authority for their own purpose. A case in point is that of a crippled father of five children, who has had a little cart in Orchard Street for fourteen years. He is so helpless that he has had to resort to the aid of his wife and one of his children to lift his small stock of potatoes to his wheel stand. Recently Supervisor. Friedman ordered him to back his stand away and make it smaller. It is only seven feet he said, and does not stand away and make it smaller. It is only seven feet, he said, and does not violate any rules of the department covering the size of pushcarts. The average cart is about eight feet long.

On the contrary, I am informed that the exactions are practised with the full knowledge of supervisors and that they even insist upon it.

Maybe this has some relation to the "good" report just referred to. Maybe the report is "good" if the peddler meets every demand of the supervisor and complies with his every exaction and wish.

However, I feel confidently assured that these collections are made by young more not connected with the Department of Markets. When this peddler refused to give up the 50 cents he was told he would be chased from the street. Under the terms of his contract, which is said to pay him $3,000 a week for three years, Valentino is promised sufficient publicity to keep him in the good graces of his public. The company holds it has been complying with the contract to the extent of the contract.

Which was hampering his pursuits of manight higher salary.

"Does Valentino think he is entitled in the sum he agreed to accept last year? He must take his is chances, just as we took ours. If he had turned out to be no good, wouldn't we have been the losers? And if his salary doesn't suit him now he must reput up with it just the same. It seems to me that he has probably received a more inviting offer to star for another company, and is looking about for a loophole which will nullify his contract."
